Ben Cardin is Maryland's junior senator and a solid liberal who is well known for his diligent work on healthcare, retirement security, fiscal issues and the environment, and who often receives the highest marks and grades from the NAACP, Human Rights Campaign and League of Conservation Voters. A lawyer by trade, Cardin has been active in Maryland politics for more than four decades. He served ten terms representing the Baltimore-based 3rd District (from 1987-2006), spending 17 years on the powerful Ways and Means Committee. Prior to that, Cardin served in the Maryland House of Delegates from 1967-1986.

Senator Cardin has supported broadcasters and extolled the virtues of localism in the recent past. In June 2014, he was one of five Senators who sent a letter to FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler voicing concern over the FCC's new rules regarding Joint Sales Agreements ("JSAs") and urging that the Commission adopt a waiver policy that does not penalize JSAs that were structured and executed prior to issuance of the Commission's new rules. In that letter, Sen. Cardin and his colleagues worried that the new JSA rules would undermine the ability of local broadcasters to serve their communities.

Senator Cardin has been opposite broadcasters on the radio performance fee issue, having cosponsored legislation to impose a performance fee in 2009-2010. Senator Cardin is also hoping to address concerns of constituents in Garrett County who do not receive Maryland television stations because they reside in the Pittsburgh television market.

Senator Mikulski has represented Maryland in the Senate since 1986. She served in Congress for ten years prior to being elected to the Senate. She began her political career on the Baltimore City Council in 1971. Mikulski has lived in Baltimore for most of her life. She was a social worker in Baltimore before entering politics, attending Mount Saint Agnes College and the University of Maryland, School of Social Work.

Mikulski has chaired the powerful Senate Appropriations Committee since 2012 and is the first Senator from Maryland, and the first woman, to hold that position. She is an advocate for higher education, senior citizens, women's health, and scientific research.

In June 2014, she was one of five Senators who sent a letter to FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler voicing concern over the FCC's new rules regarding Joint Sales Agreements ("JSAs") and urging that the Commission adopt a waiver policy that does not penalize JSAs that were structured and executed prior to issuance of the Commission's new rules. Congressman Harris has served the First District since 2011 and is characterized as being a solid conservative. He touts creating jobs and fixing the economy, reducing the deficit, improving healthcare, protecting Chesapeake Bay and the environment and veterans' rights as his key issues. Harris is an anesthesiologist who still practices at Memorial Hospital in Easton. He was also a Commander in the U.S. Naval Reserves, and his unit was called up to active duty during Operation Desert Shield and Operation Desert Storm in Iraq in the early 1990s.

Harris was one of more than 200 co-sponsors of the Local Radio Freedom Act, a resolution that opposes "any new performance fee, tax, royalty, or other charge" on local broadcast radio stations.

Congressman Dutch Ruppersberger has represented Maryland's 2nd congressional district since 2002. From Baltimore, he attended Baltimore City College and the University of Maryland, College Park, before earning his law degree from the University of Baltimore. As a young attorney, he served as an assistant state attorney in Baltimore County. He and his wife, Kay, live in Baltimore. They have two children and three grandchildren.

Ruppersberger began his political career in 1985, being elected to the Baltimore County Council for two terms. He then went on to be elected Baltimore County Executive, a position he held from 1994 until 2002. Following redistricting, which made the second congressional district solidly Democrat, he successfully ran for Congress in 2002.

On the broadcasting front, the Congressman co-sponsored the Local Radio Freedom Act, a resolution that opposes "any new performance fee, tax, royalty, or other charge" on local broadcast radio stations in 2009.

Congresswoman Donna Edwards has represented Maryland's 4th congressional district since 2008. The district includes portions of Prince George and Anne Arundel counties. A resident of Fort Washington, Edwards received her B.A. in English and Spanish from Wake Forest University, and earned her law degree from the University of New Hampshire School of Law. Edwards has been an active public interest advocate, fighting issues such as domestic violence and championing campaign finance reform.

She decided to enter politics when her son went to college. After running unsuccessfully in the primary against Al Wynn, the incumbent, in 2006, Edwards defeated Wynn in 2008 with over 60 percent of the vote. Following Wynn's resignation in June 2008, Edwards won the special election to serve out the last six months of his unexpired term. Congresswoman Edwards does not have a significant history of positions on broadcasting issues.

The longest-serving member of the House ever from Maryland, Congressman Hoyer is the House Minority Whip and has served Maryland’s Fifth District since 1981, with a long record of holding leadership positions within the Congress. He served as the House Majority Leader from 2007 to 2011 and has also served as the House Democratic Whip. Hoyer touts among his many accomplishments his efforts to create and save jobs in and around the 5th District, his support of every major piece of environmental legislation since he has been in Congress, and his efforts to meet and improve the transportation needs of his constituents. Hoyer went to high school in Prince George’s County (Suitland High School) and is a graduate of the University of Maryland and Georgetown University Law Center. He won a seat in the Maryland Senate at the age of 27.

Congressman Hoyer is opposite broadcasters on the performance fee issue, having publicly supported the recording artists’ calls for a performance tax. He has served as a co-chair of the House Recording Arts and Sciences Caucus.

Congressman Delaney has represented Maryland's 6th congressional district since 2012. The 6th district includes portions of the Washington, D.C. suburbs and Washington, Allegany, and Garrett Counties. After graduating from Columbia University and Georgetown University Law Center, Delaney went on to found and serve as CEO of two publicly-traded companies (HealthCare Financial Partners and CapitalSource). Delaney, his wife, April, and their four daughters live in Montgomery County. His wife is also an attorney and serves as the Washington Director for Common Sense Media, a non-profit that educates families on social media, technology, and digital literacy.

In Congress, Delaney has championed an infrastructure jobs bill (The Partnership to Build American Act). He is a moderate Democrat who, in 2011, founded Blueprint Maryland, a non-profit whose mission is to revitalize Maryland's economy. Some speculate that Delaney may run for statewide office.

In his district, citizens of Garrett County are frustrated that they can only get broadcasts from Pennsylvania stations in the Pittsburgh DMA. Delaney's office is searching for a solution to this issue and has reached out to the MDCD for background and assistance.

Congresswoman Norton is now in her 13th term serving as Washington, D.C.'s non-voting delegate to the House. She has spent much of her time fighting for full congressional voting representation for the District. An attorney who holds both a law and master's degree from Yale, Norton taught law full time prior to serving in Congress and remains a tenured professor at Georgetown University, where she still teaches a seminar every year. President Carter appointed her to serve as chair of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; she was the first woman to serve in that post. She has received more than 50 honorary degrees.

Delaware elected Senator Coons in a 2010 special election to fill the seat of Joe Biden, who resigned to become Vice President. Coons grew up in Hockessin, and he, along with his wife, Anne, and three children, currently live in Wilmington. He has a B.A. in Chemistry and Political Science from Amherst College, in addition to a law degree from Yale, and a Master's in Ethics from Yale Divinity School.

Senator Coons's political career began in 2000, when he was elected to the New Castle County Council, where he served as president for four years, and county executive for six years. Before becoming New Castle County Executive, Coons was an attorney at W.L. Gore & Associates, a large company that creates electronics, fabrics, industrial and medical products. The Senator has also spent time in South Africa, serving as a relief worker in Kenya and volunteering with the South African Council of Churches.

As a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Coons is in a position to engage on important issues relating to broadcasting, particularly those issues that are related to copyright law (i.e. performance fee and music royalty legislation and issues relating to delivery of video services).

Congressman John Carney has represented the state of Delaware since 2011. Carney played football at Dartmouth College, and earned a Master in Public Administration from the University of Delaware. Carney and his wife, Tracey, and two sons live in Wilmington.

Carney has held a number of offices since beginning his political career, including Deputy Chief Administrative Officer of New Castle County, Secretary of Finance and Deputy Chief of Staff to Governor Tom Carper, and Lieutenant Governor of Delaware (from 2001-2009). Since serving in Congress, Carney has started a bipartisan policy group that regularly discusses pending issues before the chamber. Carney is an advocate for health issues and the "Make it in America" agenda.

In 2013, Carney was one of more than 200 co-sponsors of the Local Radio Freedom Act, a resolution that opposes "any new performance fee, tax, royalty, or other charge" on local broadcast radio stations.
